On a journey to the Gulf of Carpentaria, they shot their first saltwater crocodile, the start of a lucrative business. But by the 70s, Kryś and Ron, realising that the crocodile population was declining, lobbied the government and succeeded in prohibiting the export of crocodile skins. Where women were told to be gentle and dutiful, Hideko was a tomboy and copied what the boys did. Her reluctance to follow Japanese tradition shaped her destiny and in 1953 she became one of three hundred Japanese war brides to come to Australia and make a new home.
